Welcome...

Christmas is one of the busiest times of the year, making it the perfect opportunity to offer customers products they'll love. Our Gifting Season Selling Guide brings together a selection of gift ideas that are ideal for corporate gifting, retail, promotions and personalised presents. Browse the range, find inspiration, and get ready for the festive season with confidence.

A Gifting Season Timeline

● September

Start planning ahead

The busiest time of the year comes around quickly, so now is the time to get organised. Think about the products your customers are likely to need, from seasonal favourites to the latest trends. Consider the opportunities ahead, including retail promotions, festive attractions, corporate gifting, staff events and branded merchandise.

Use our Favourites feature to build product lists for different customers or projects, making it easier to manage upcoming orders and keep everything in one place.

How we can help

- Explore new products and seasonal best sellers
- Save products with Favourites for easy ordering later
- Speak to our team for product advice and recommendations

● October

Start to get your orders in place

With your plans taking shape, it's time to secure the stock you'll need. Ordering early gives you more flexibility and helps you stay ahead as demand builds.

Use our Quick Order feature to place orders efficiently, or speak to our team if you're sourcing products for a larger project. If you need help with pricing or finding the right garments, we're here to support you every step of the way.

How we can help

- Quick Order for faster purchasing
- Product sourcing support
- Pricing advice for larger opportunities
- Reliable stock availability and expert account support

● November

Keep orders moving

This is when things really start to pick up. Promote your products across your marketing channels, stay in touch with customers and keep orders flowing.

As demand increases, we're here to help you fulfil orders quickly and confidently. With a range of delivery options and a knowledgeable customer service team, you can spend less time worrying about stock and more time looking after your customers.

How we can help

- Fast and flexible delivery options
- Reliable stock when demand is high
- Friendly support whenever you need us

● December

Finish strong and look ahead

As the festive rush begins to slow, it's the perfect time to complete outstanding orders and reflect on the season.

Gather feedback from your customers, review which products performed well and think about what you'd do differently next year. Every busy season is an opportunity to learn, and we'll be here to help you prepare for the next one.

How we can help

- Ongoing account support
- Product insights and recommendations
- Planning advice to help you prepare for next year's gifting season

Why Planning Early for Christmas Matters

Christmas is one of the busiest gifting seasons of the year, making it an important time for printers and embroiderers to plan ahead. Businesses start looking for branded gifts well before the festive rush, giving decorators who prepare early the best chance to secure orders, manage stock and maximise sales.

The opportunity continues to grow. The UK personalised gifting market is forecast to increase by £1.26 billion between 2025 and 2029, driven by growing demand for unique, customised products and changing gifting trends. At the same time, 84% of consumers purchased a gift in the past year, with shoppers aged 16–34 leading the demand for personalised products.

Personalised gifting goes far beyond novelty Christmas jumpers. Businesses are looking for meaningful ways to thank customers, reward employees and strengthen relationships with gifts that feel thoughtful and memorable. Retailers are also seeking products that offer something more personal than standard off-the-shelf alternatives.

From embroidered blankets and teddy bears to premium hoodies, tote bags and drinkware, the right product range can help your customers stand out during the festive season while creating new opportunities for your business.

This guide is packed with seasonal inspiration to help you prepare for Christmas, expand your product offering and give your customers more choice when it matters most.

Top Tip

The earlier your customers start planning, the more choice they'll have. Encourage them to order early to avoid stock pressures closer to Christmas.

Who to Sell to This Christmas

Christmas gifting creates opportunities across a wide range of industries. Businesses are looking for thoughtful, personalised gifts that thank employees, reward customers and strengthen relationships. Identifying these customers early can help you secure repeat business before the festive rush.

Corporate businesses

Many companies invest in branded Christmas gifts for employees and clients. Embroidered blankets, premium hoodies, drinkware and tote bags are popular choices that combine practicality with a personal touch.

Schools and universities

Schools often look for end-of-term gifts for staff, while universities may need branded merchandise for students, societies and festive events. Personalised accessories and clothing are always popular options.

Hospitality

Hotels, restaurants and venues often thank their teams with Christmas gifts or branded merchandise. Seasonal hampers, embroidered accessories and premium apparel can all add value.

Retailers and independent gift shops

Retailers are always looking for products that stand out during the festive season. Personalised gifts offer something different from standard high street products and appeal to customers searching for meaningful presents.

Sports clubs and community groups

Christmas is a popular time for clubs to reward volunteers, coaches and members. Branded hoodies, beanies, drinkware and accessories make practical gifts that can be personalised with names or club branding.

BRING CHRISTMAS TO LIFE WITH MUMBLES.

Upselling and Bundling During Gifting Season

Gifting season is a strong opportunity to increase order value, build better customer relationships and keep your business front of mind going into 2027.

Two simple ways to make more of each enquiry are upselling and bundling. Both can help your customers create a stronger gifting offer while giving you the chance to generate more value from every order.

Upselling during gifting season

Upselling is about offering a higher-value option when it genuinely suits your customer's needs.

For example, if a customer is looking for embroidered Christmas sweatshirts, you could show them a standard option alongside a heavier-weight alternative with a more premium feel.

Good product knowledge makes this much easier. Understanding fabric weight, fit, finish and decoration suitability means you can explain the benefits clearly and recommend the right option with confidence.

The aim is not to push the most expensive product, but to help your customer choose the best option for their brief and budget.

Make the most of bundling

Bundling means combining related products into one offer, often at a better price than buying each item separately.

If a customer is ordering a Mumbles soft toy as a baby gift, you could suggest adding a babygrow and hat to create a complete gift set.

You can apply the same idea across other gifting opportunities too, such as pairing hoodies with beanies, workwear with accessories or branded clothing with bags.

The best bundles are simple, relevant and useful. By helping customers get everything they need in one place, you can increase order value while making the buying process easier for them.

Top Tip

Don't just sell the product, sell the complete gift. Pair complementary items together and give customers a ready-made solution that's easier to buy and can increase the value of every order.

Marketing Tips for Gifting Season

Christmas and gifting season bring plenty of opportunities to get your business in front of customers. Social media is one of the easiest ways to stay visible, show what you can offer and give customers ideas for their own gifting orders. Here are a few simple marketing tips to make the most of the season.

1. Use seasonal colours without losing your brand

If you are creating graphics or promotional materials, think about how colour can help communicate the season.

Warm tones, reds and golds can work well as accent colours. You do not need to change your whole brand look, just add a few seasonal touches to make your content feel timely and relevant.

2. Show your products in use

It can be easy to post products folded, hanging up or on a plain background, but people often respond better when they can picture the finished result.

If you have printed a Christmas jumper, model it or ask someone else to wear it. You could also create a short video showing the decoration, key product details and how customers can place an order.

Getting in front of the camera can feel daunting at first, but it becomes easier with practice.

3. Use customer testimonials

If a customer placed a large gifting order with you last Christmas, ask them for a testimonial.

Sharing positive feedback helps show potential customers that they can trust you with their own Christmas orders and gives you useful content to post across your marketing channels.

MM563

Marketing Tips for Gifting Season

Social media content ideas

Try a few simple posts throughout the season:

Products we think you'll love this gifting season – Highlight a selection of garments or accessories suited to Christmas gifting.

Swipe to Christmas – Show a blank garment first, followed by the decorated version styled in a festive setting.

Behind the order – Share a short video of a product being printed or embroidered.

Gift bundle ideas – Show customers how different products can be combined into one gifting package.

Create a Content Calendar

Planning your content ahead of time can make the busy season much easier to manage.

Create your own content calendar or use our ready-made template to save time and stay organised. We've already added some of our planned social posts, giving you a useful starting point for your own content.
